I liked this essay collection but didn't love it as a whole. There were a couple of essays that I felt didn't go anywhere or didn't go deep enough (ie: Installations -- this particular essay lacked focus imo). With that said, there are three essays that knocked my socks off: American Gray Space, No Country, and Americana/Dying of Thirst.

Some of Us Are Very Hungry Now by Andre Perry

These two essays nicely introduce and complete the perspectives developed in the mid- dle three essays. Two of these works attack the abuse of statistics, either as a moral issue or as a coverup for incompetence. One criticizes the recently popular substitution of managers for leaders in military environments.

At the start of the series, all three authors were contributing; the first 20 papers are broken down as 11 by Hamilton, five by Madison and four by Jay. The rest of the series, however, is dominated by three long segments by a single writer: Nos. 21-36 by Hamilton, Nos. 37-58 by Madison, written while Hamilton was in Albany, and No. 65 through the end by Hamilton, published after Madison had left for Virginia.

The last three essays worked up to a beautiful crescendo of respect for Schreiner. This is because they are not only about his work and accomplishments, but about his character. Robert L. Plummer showed how Schreiner's academic ministry was exemplary and unmatched in competency, humility, church-based applications, collegiality, and Christian love.

Three more essays turn to Wilsnack itself. Krzysztof Bracha situates Wilsnack's pilgrimage within wider debates over blood cult in the 1440s and 1450s, focusing on three treatises of James of Jüterborg, a Carthusian. At first, Bracha argues, James offered a measured, ambivalent assessment of the cult at Wilsnack.

The American health system, Beatrix Hoffman argues, has always been characterized by two things. The first is a refusal to adopt a right to care— the closest thing the U.S. system has to a right to health care is EMTALA, an act passed in 1986 that requires the provision of emergency care for the indigent and uninsured. The second is the unequal and ineffective rationing of medical services by ...
